Objective: What does "Austronesian" mean? What makes linguists and ecologists come together? Multidisciplinary communication enables us to understand linguistic and biological diversities spread over a wide area bounded by Madagascar in the west to Rapa Nui (Easter Island) in the east, and Maori in New Zealand at the south to Taiwan in the north. This area includes thousands of islands such as Malaysia, Philippines, Indonesia, Samoa, Tonga and Hawaiian islands, all sharing a common ancestral language.

Come join us in Kyoto for a stimulating time with oral and poster presentations, through which we will share the attractive aspects of Austronesian studies.
